Overview

Does the term “globalization” capture the essence of what is taking shape in the 21st century? How do we understand this dynamic and fast-changing world economy? Political Economy 483 International Political Economy: The Politics of Globalization is a senior-level, three-credit course cross-listed with Global Studies, International Relations, and Political Economy. The course introduces highly contested issues and contradictory positions concerning the meaning and significance of globalization. Students will situate current global processes within the historical development of the world economy and learn to view these changes through a variety of theoretical lenses. The course materials critically engage the structural changes occurring between different world regions, among international financial institutions—such as the World Trade Organization, the International Monetary Fund, the World Bank—as well as multinational business corporations. Finally, students will be engaged with issues of global governance in the 21st Century, as new economic and political centres of power emerge and evolve.
