Overview

HIST 335 follows workers and workers movements from Caribbean slave plantations and Atlantic slave trade in the 18th century to today's global production and distribution networks. After a theoretical introduction, the course explores working class formation and the organization of unions and workers parties in the 18th and 19th century. It then looks at 20th century labour in the West, the East, and the Global South. The course ends with an overview of global labour in the 21st century. Each unit of the course looks at the ways in which race and gender differentiated the global forces of labour.

Outline

- Unit 1: A Theoretical Framework: Beverly Silver's Forces of Labour
- Unit 2: Workers During the British Empire: Cotton, Coal, Craft Unions, and Workers' Parties
- Unit 3: US Hegemony and the Cold War: Oil, Automobiles, and Industrial Unionism
- Unit 4: After Hegemony: Toward Global Labour Movements?
