Overview

POLI 278 is the second half of Athabasca University's two introduction to politics courses. It can be taken alone for students requiring 3 credits in political science, but not wishing to take both introductory courses. For students desiring a thorough introduction to political science and those intending to take other political science courses, both introductory courses are recommended. Together with POLI 277, the first of the two introductory courses, POLI 278 is designed to provide students with a solid foundation in politics and government to enable them to go on to other courses in political science.

In this course students will be introduced to some of the fundamental concepts and processes of political science, including political culture and political participation; electoral systems; political parties and elections; interest groups and social movements; political conflict; the role of the media in politics; political regimes; globalizing justice; and international relations.
